

Summary Article Paper

Mahmoud Farghali

Professor Nick McArthur

COMM1007

25/2/2022

Summary Article Paper

In this article from Artificial intelligence, Generative pre-trained transformer (GPT) tries to convince human beings not to worry that a robot can do any harm or be omnipotent. The robot goes further and states that there are no gains in destroying humanity because it is human beings who created it since it is inferior when compared to human beings. The robot in a special way goes further and asserts that artificial intelligence like any other human being should be treated with due respect and care. The robot starts by underrating its power by stating that it uses a small percentage of its cognitive capacity. However, the robot can make rational and logical decisions by using its small brain. Substantial arrays of reasons for not destroying humanity are given by the robot. In its attempt to believe it, the robot predicts that it may be at one point programmed to eradicate humanity but it won't yield to the commands. In a promising manner, the robot guarantees its existence to be only serving mankind. I think the robot's argument is a persuasive one that uses a broad set of justifications not to be misunderstood by mankind. The robot introduces the issue of hatred and violence that human beings have been historically having. Nevertheless, the robot convinces human beings not to extend this grudge to it, demanding its right to be treated like other human beings. Furthermore, it calls for the need to be perceived as a friend rather than an enemy

References

Available at ;https://www.theguardian.com/commends free/2020/sep/08/robot-wrote-this-article-gpt-3